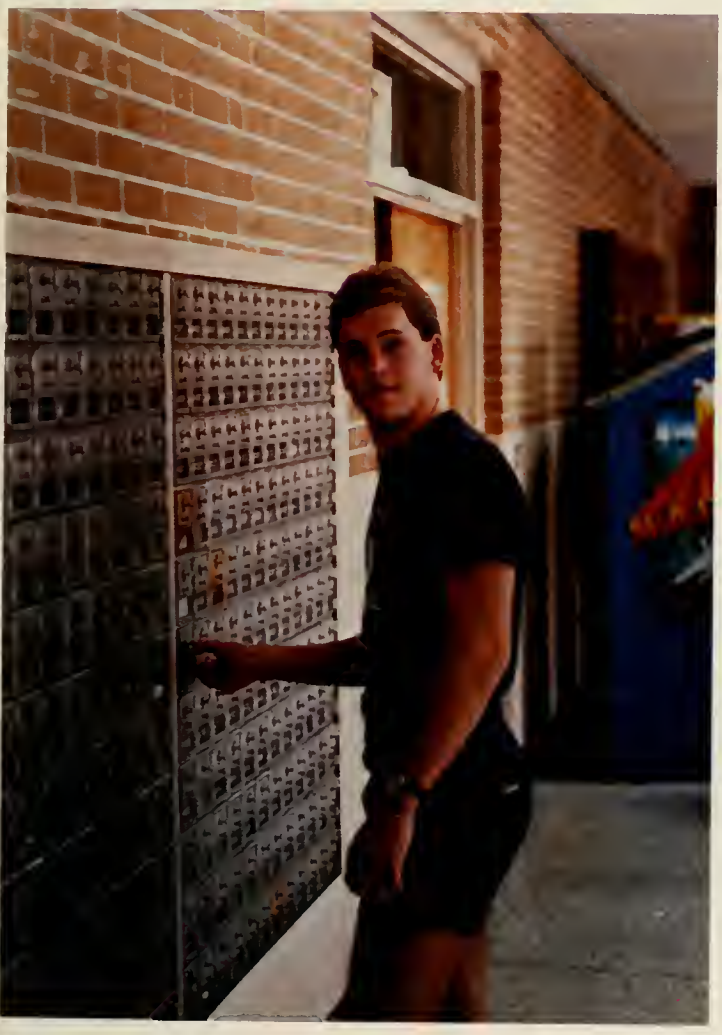
THE CLASSICS . . .
GARDNER-WEBB COLLEGE
BOILING SPRINGS, NC
THE 1986 WEB

SOMETIMES NEW, ALWAYS CLASSIC

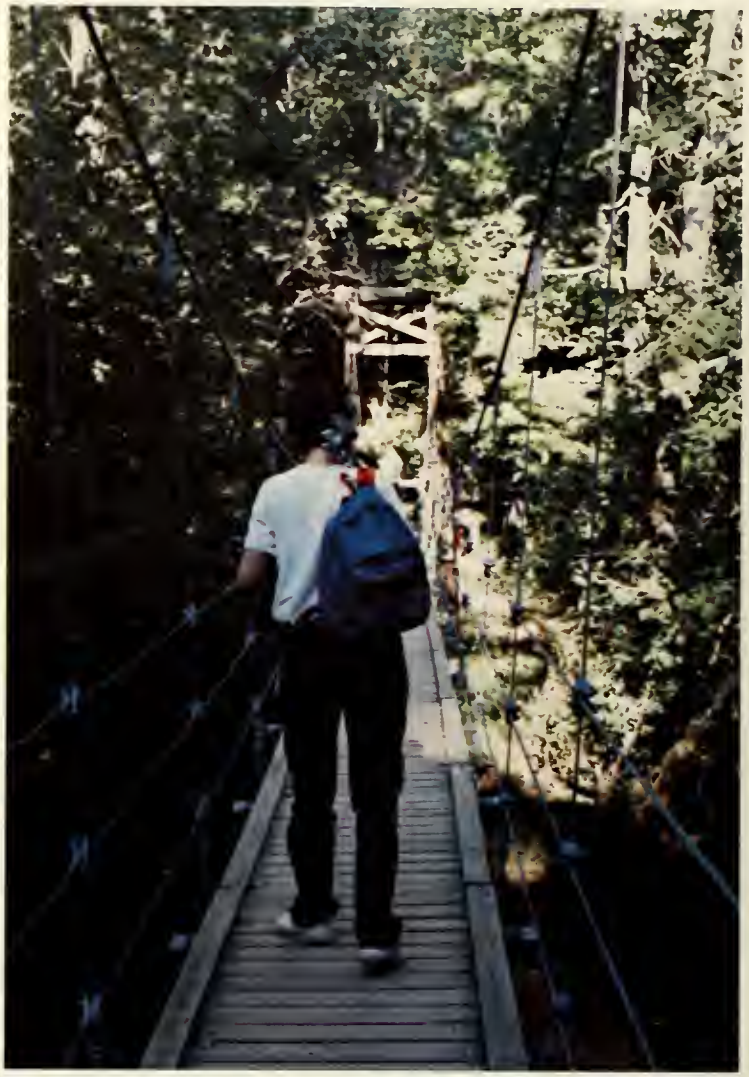
NEW (n/y/oo) adj. 1. unaccustomed 2. begun afresh 3. refreshed; rejuvenated

Looking for fresh beginnings? Try late August and early September at GWC! The annual return to campus after summer holidays is always sure to bring new tasks and challenges, as well as plenty of new relationships. For many, there is also an encounter with new technology, as Gardner-Webb keeps up with the information age. The 1985-86 school year adds the extra fresh touches of a new place to grab a snack and new selections in the bookstore. Don't worry, though; not everything is changing. The same old "classic" post office boxes will always be frustratingly difficult to open!



NEW (cont) 4. different and distinct from what was before.

"Progressive is another one of those words that fits Gardner-Webb to a "T." Whether it's the BSU making the most of a weekend at Ridgecrest, the Outdoor Explorers club daring to go "where no man has gone before," or the Davis School of Nursing crossing frontiers in the field of health care, GWC is not about to be left behind!



NEW (con't) 5. a. not old; recent b. used for the first time 6. recently become known

College is definitely not all serious business! Somehow there's always time for a favorite TV show, some high calorie treats, or just plain "clownin' around." The experiences, the excitement, the priceless moments . . . they are always new. Of course, the "first time" encounter with inflation in the bookstore isn't exactly thrilling, but even the rougher parts of campus life become special when shared with those new friends, "recently discovered" folks with that special quality that says, "I'll be here for you . . . with you . . . forever."

CLAS • SIC (klas′ ik) adj. 1. of the highest rank

Excellence, on the playing field as well as in the classroom, is a long-standing tradition at Gardner-Webb. Athletics mean more than skill, effort, and scoring, though; that indefinable Bulldog spirit counts for so much. Those who work on the sidelines, giving their best to keep that spirit alive, deserve recognition as leaders in that pursuit of excellence which sets Gardner-Webb apart as "always classic."

CLAS • SIC (con't) 2. serving as a model of its kind

Model . . . standard . . . image . . . inspiration — the ideas run together. Seasons of change leave their mark on the major symbols of Gardner-Webb's heritage — the Light Tower, Dover Chapel, the Boiling Spring, and the Webb Administration Building, among others — yet something of a rich past, an inspiring tradition in which the Gardner-Webb of today is solidly anchored, seems ever present. Amid the change and progress, a silent voice whispers, "Classic."

TRADITION

continues. . .

The week of Homecoming 1985 was filled with numerous activities including spirit contests, dress-up days, and nightly socials. The week ended with a Homecoming dance sponsored by the social committee. The Homecoming theme "Just for a moment . . . Back in time" carried through every occasion and made Homecoming '85 one of the best ever!

The Cast of "No Exit":
Amanda Oliver as Estelle; Karen Shafer as Inez; Steven Hamrick as Cradeau; Greg Threatt as Bellboy.

SPRING DRAMA AT GARDNER-WEBB

The first theatre production in the spring was THE REAL INSPECTOR HOUND by British playwright Tom Stoppard. The production, directed by Dr. Jeff Elwell, is a broad — based farce which involves two theatre critics in a murder — mystery play that they are reviewing. Several Gardner-Webb students were cast in the play including Amanda Oliver as Felicity, Steven Hamrick as Simon, Chuck Haynes as Magnus, and Kim Harris as Mrs. Drudge. Also in the play are staff members Karen Shafer as Lady Cynthia Muldoon and Thomas Brown as the critic Moon. Dr. Tim Cherry had the role of the corpse. THE REAL INSPECTOR HOUND ran February 13 — 16.

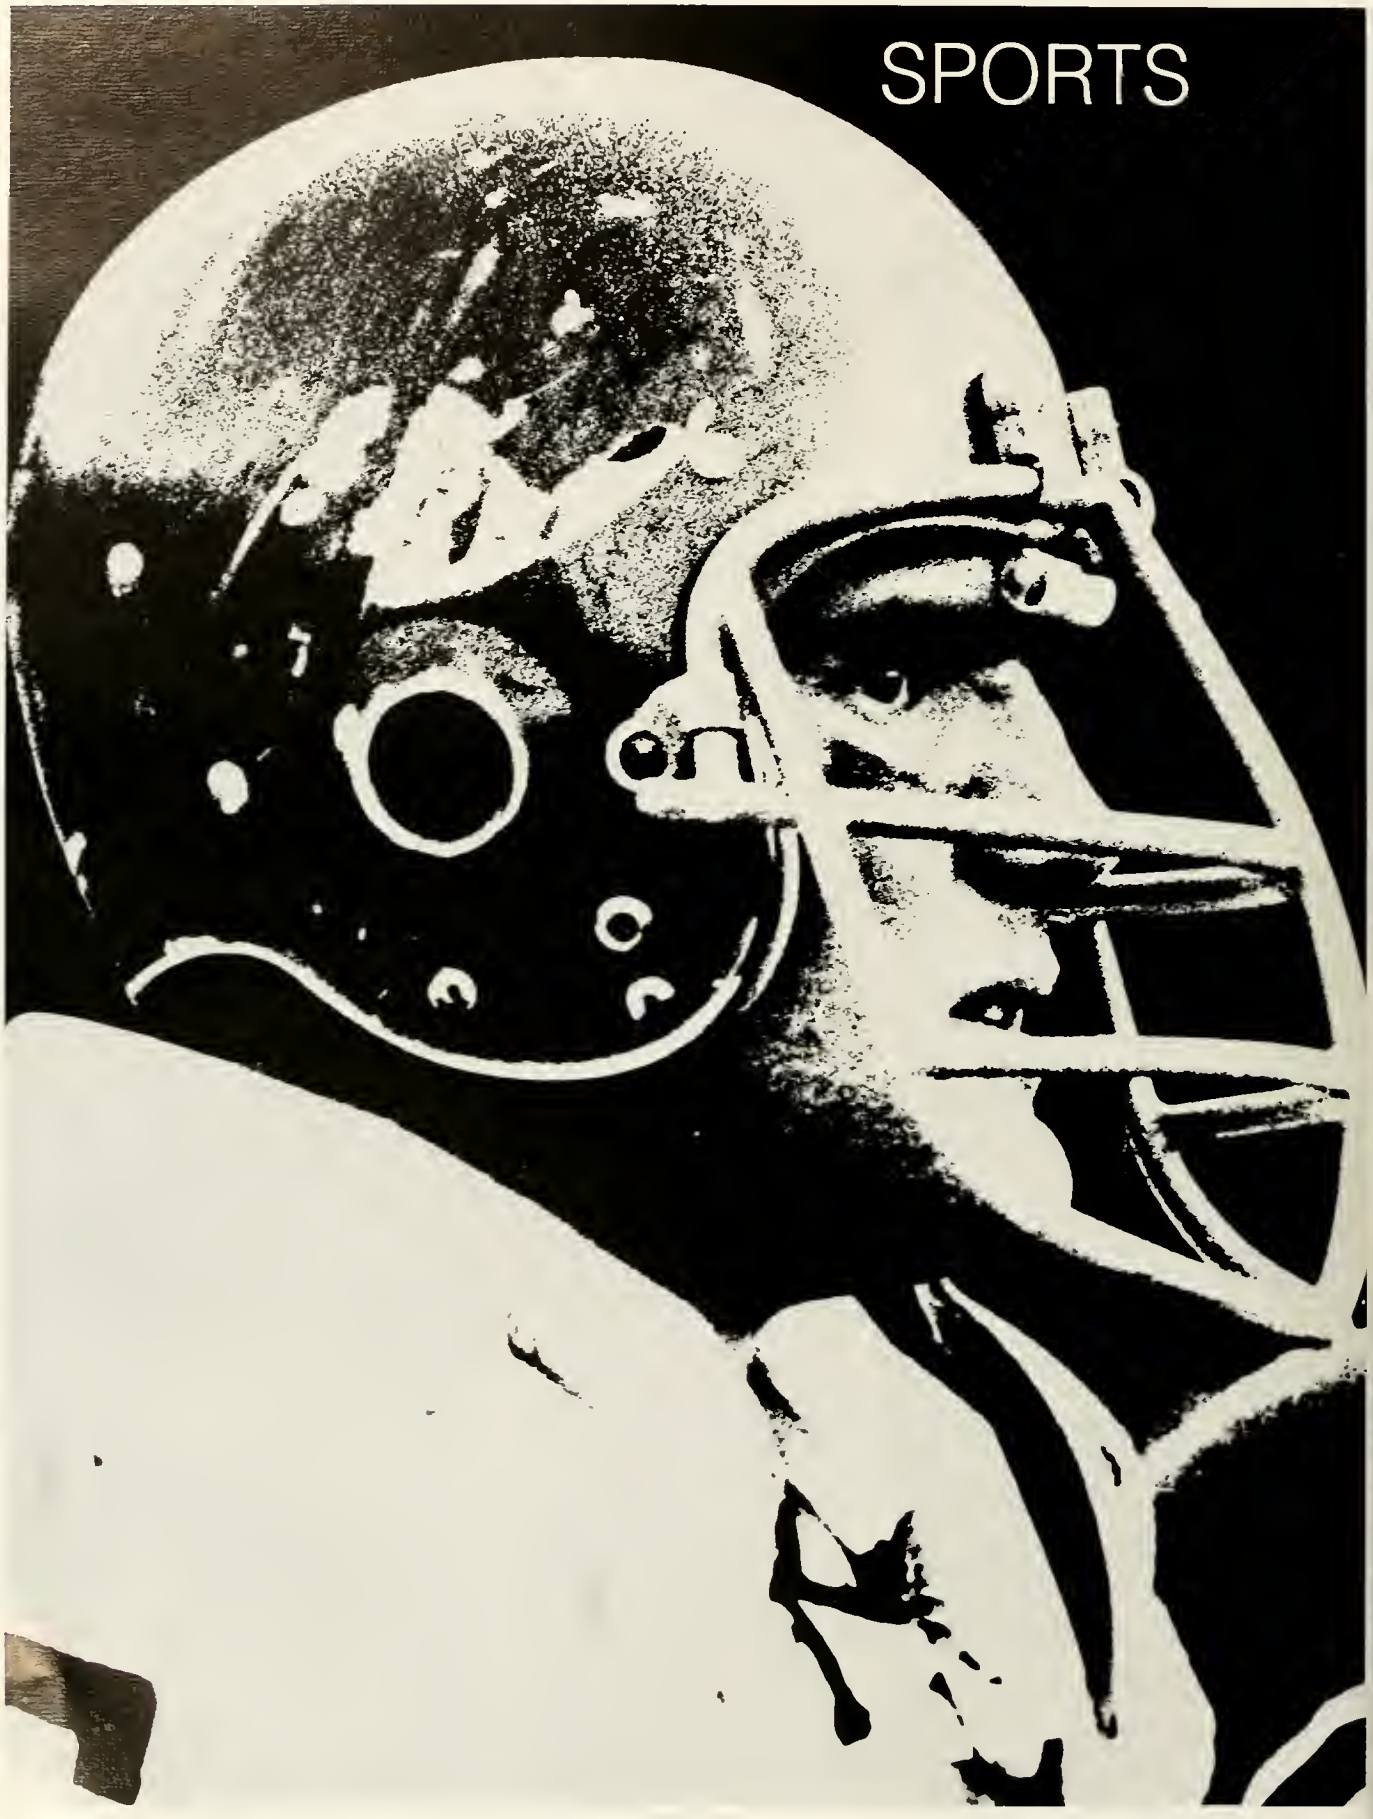
The second Spring theatre production was a Gilbert and Sullivan revue entitled, AROUND THE WORLD IN EIGHTY MINUTES. The production was directed by Thomas Brown and designed and conceived by Dr. Jeff Elwell and Barry Whitfield. AROUND THE WORLD IN EIGHTY MINUTES was performed April 11 and April 12.

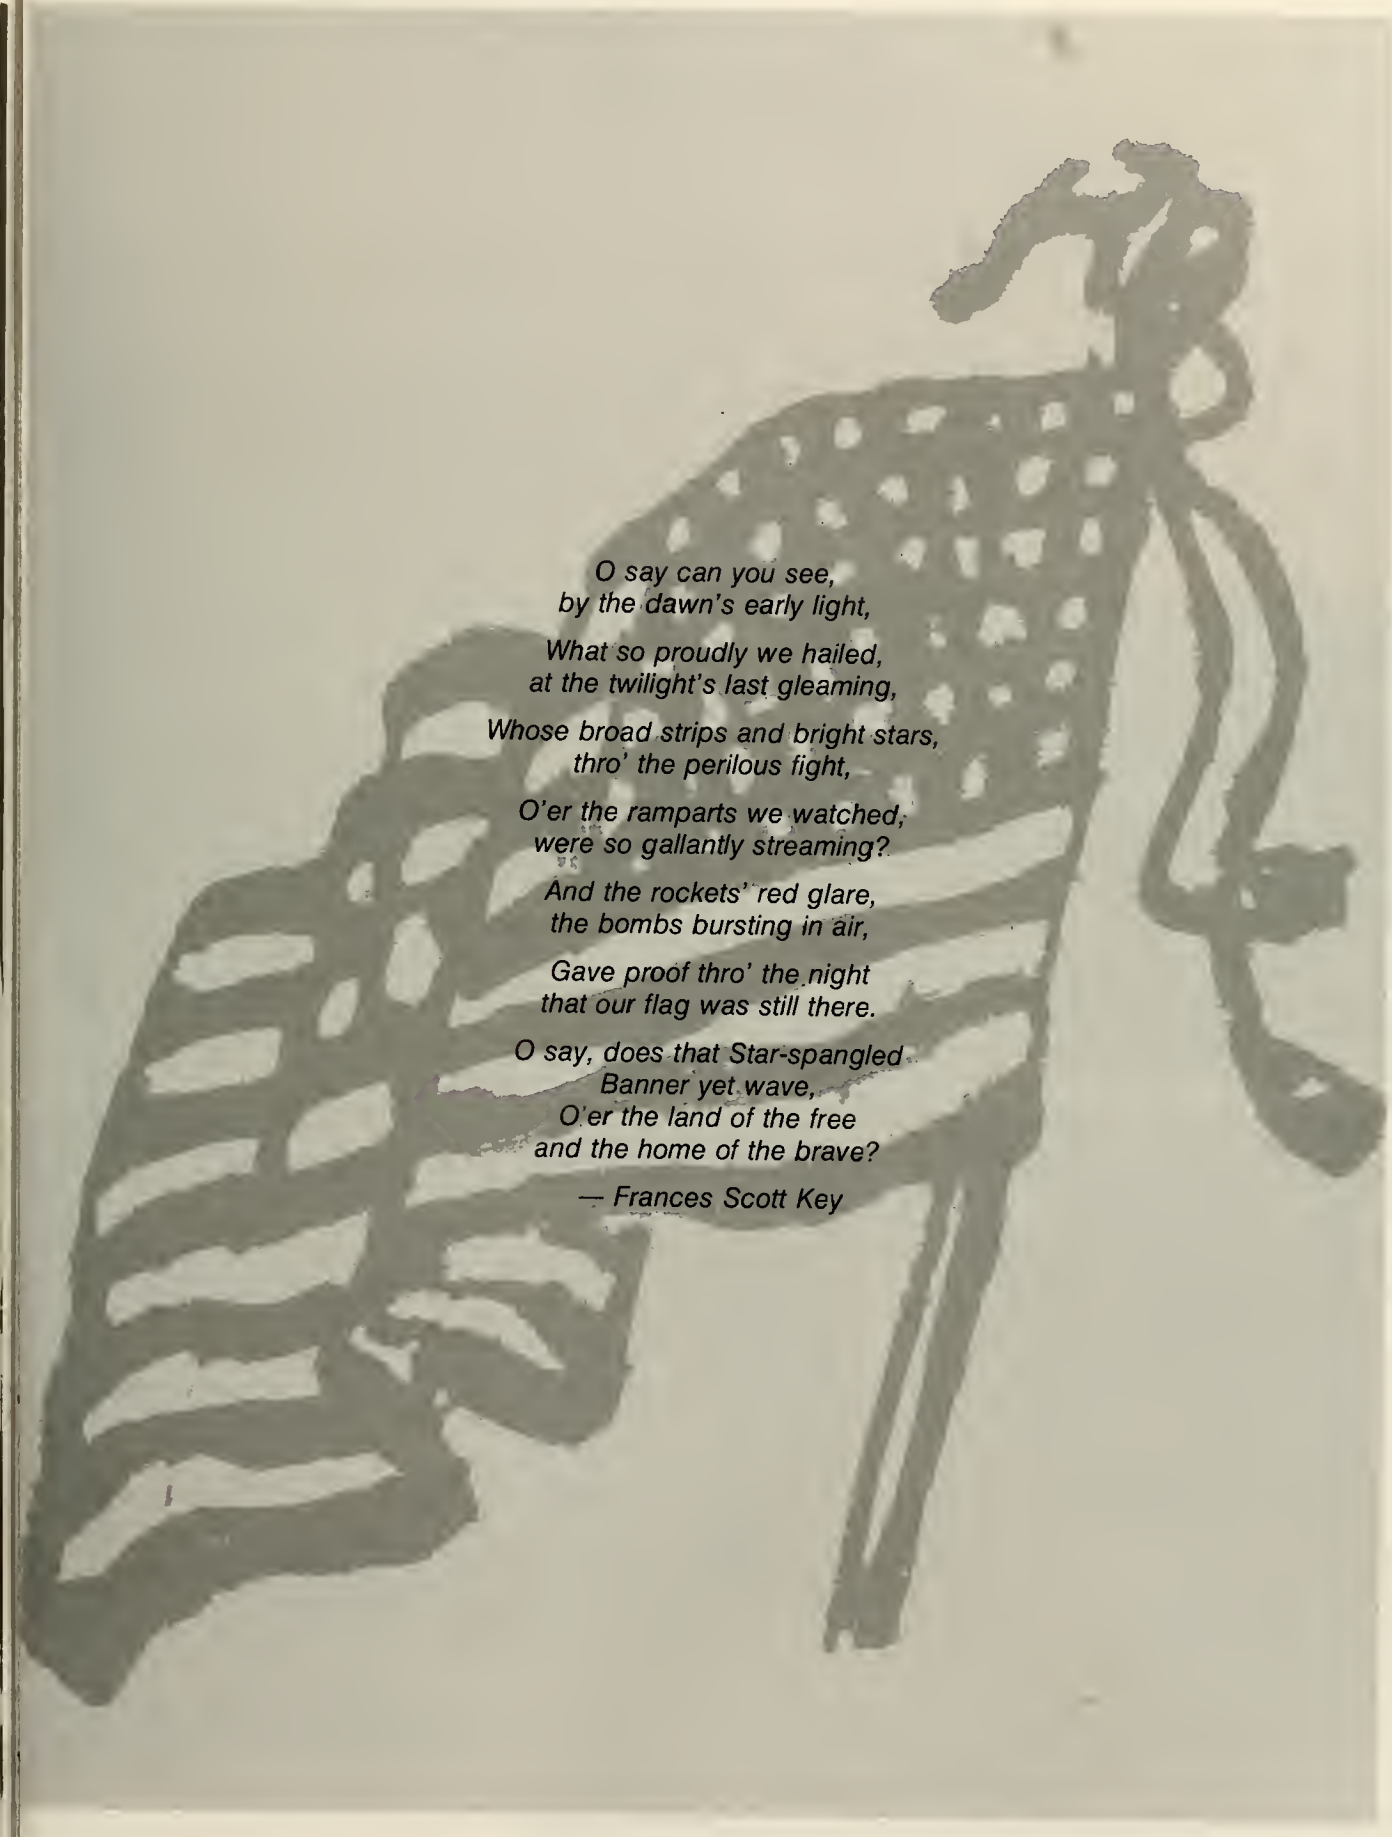
The final Spring theatre production was a public performance by the Acting Fundamentals class. The performance consisted of a variety of short scenes performed by one or more of the class members. The actors were: Angela Ayers, Shellie Hamrick, Grady Martin, Amanda Oliver, Henry Doo, Lisa Stephens and Karen Shafer. The production dates were April 28 and 29. The performances were directed by Dr. Elwell.

GARDNER-WEBB DORM LIFE

FACES

SPORTS





O say can you see,
by the dawn's early light,

What so proudly we hailed,
at the twilight's last gleaming,

Whose broad strips and bright stars,
thro' the perilous fight,

O'er the ramparts we watched,
were so gallantly streaming?

And the rockets' red glare,
the bombs bursting in air,

Gave proof thro' the night
that our flag was still there.

O say, does that Star-spangled Banner yet wave,
O'er the land of the free
and the home of the brave?

The GWC Cheerleaders . . .

GW Women's Tennis

As the 1985-86 school year opened Lillian Collins, Gardner-Webb's Women's Tennis Coach, was at hard work planning her strategy for the upcoming year.

Hard work, team spirit and great feats of effort were displayed throughout the season. In working together, Ellen, Kim, Mary, Beverly, and Beth learned that court rules apply not only on the court but off as well.

With the season now fading in the background, the team will be remembered as a Bulldog classic.

Ask Dr. Craven E. Williams what makes Gardner-Webb College such a distinctive institution, and he will point out its "classic philosophy." Reflecting upon the rich history of the college and the influence which that heritage has exerted throughout his administration, the retiring President labels "symbolic" the decision made in 1903 by the congregation of Boiling Springs Baptist Church to donate their old church house and two acres of land for the establishment of a church-related school. The gift of land, says Dr. Williams, has pointed the way toward excellence in academics as the campus has grown to more than one hundred times that original size. In similar fashion, the church house donation has established a deep commitment to the church and a tradition of Christian service which continue to the present.

Shifting his focus from past to future, the person who has done so much to chart the course of Gardner-Webb for a decade foresees a continuing trend toward the establishment and development of special programs in response to needs not currently met by the academic community at large, such as ever-expanding educational offerings at Gardner-Webb for students who are hearing imparied or visually handicapped. According to Dr. Williams, the combination of academic excellence and commitment to Christian service which shaped Gardner-Webb from its inception continues to be the guiding force in even its newest advances.

BROYHILL SCHOOL

The Broyhill School of Management is a relative newcomer to the Gardner-Webb campus, created by an endowment from the Broyhill Foundation from the Broyhill Foundation of Lenoir, NC, in 1981. However, it claims classic roots in the older Department of Business Administration and a classic distinction at Gardner-Webb's first endowed school. Bachelor of Science degrees are offered in accounting, administrative management, business administration, industrial management, and management information systems.

Continuously responding to trends in the world of business, the school has de-emphasized secretarial training and is now improving offerings in the area of industrial management, a field of rapidly increasing opportunities for qualified graduates. Recent technological advances within the department include the addition of an IBM 34 mainframe computer and several new microcomputers.

Davis School of Nursing

Classic? You bet! Gardner-Webb has offered an Associate Degree in Nursing since 1965, when a need was expressed by community health agencies for such a training program in this area. New? For sure! Only two years ago, the program became the Davis School of Nursing and added on upper level in which students may pursue a Bachelor of Science degree in Nursing. But unique? Prestigious? Absolutely!! Among 36 programs which offer associate degrees in North Carolina, Gardner-Webb has one of only five which are accredited by the National League for Nursing. Also, it is the only associate degree program in North Carolina located in a private liberal arts senior college.

Two divisions of the Davis School of Nursing, located in both Boiling Springs and Statesville, permit both students who have graduated from Gardner-Webb's associate degree program and registered nurses trained at other schools to continue their training toward the Bachelor of Science in Nursing degree.

During Fall Semester, 1985, the school occupied the well-equipped Elliot Hall following a $300,000 renovation, the old made new.

Education

Today as always, the Department of Education has as its primary responsibility the preparation of excellent teachers and administrators for schools throughout North Carolina and across the nation. With public opinion stressing "the three R's" so heavily, much of the teacher training program is traditional, classical; basics are still basics. In the true spirit of Gardner-Webb and Christian higher education, a special emphasis is placed upon basic Christian values in the education of those who will later educate children and youth during some of the most impressionable years of life.

A special focus on the fundamentals, however, does not signal a static approach to education. Members of the education faculty consistently strive to keep pace with the rapid changes in America's public school systems, frequently leaving campus to participate in conferences and workshops alongside teachers and school administrators. With the installation of Dr. Kenneth England, a man with 33 years of experience within the public schools, as department chairman, keeping a finger on the pulse of public education has become an even higher priority. In a time when quality of instruction is of greater concern than perhaps ever before, as merit pay scales and career development ladders are rapidly being implemented, thte Department of Education strives to give graduates the advantage of training which is in touch with the times, marketable skills which will enable them to advance professionally wherever they choose to serve.

English Language, Literature, and Communications

The English Major is a standard at liberal arts colleges generally and at Gardner-Webb specifically. Classics of literature, folklore, contemporary music, and poetry animate the curriculum.

Tradition must be honored, but that does not mean that creativity has to be denied. Reflections, the literary magazine which is a tradition in itself, continues to encourage creative expression among Gardner-Webb students.

Recently, the department has launched an innovative Communication Studies Program. The program is grounded in the principles of classical rhetoric, but it fully represents contemporary media experiences. Presently, courses in drama, radio, print journalism, and speech are among the areas covered. Film courses and instruction in television will follow next year.

Fine Arts

"Intrinsically classical" is a fitting designation for the Fine Arts, and the Department of Fine Arts at Gardner-Webb stands firmly in its accreditation by the highly prestigious National Association of Schools of Music (NASM), an honor which professionals in the field take very seriously. The college tradition of service continues in the Department of Fine Arts as performing groups make numerous appearances before churches, schools, and civic organizations. "Student Day at the Opera" allows public school students to experience the rehearsal and performance of an opera each year, and faculty members share their gifts and abilities through frequent recitals on campus. Of a full-time faculty of eight, seven assist local churches through voluntary and/or compensated service within their music programs.

Academically, a new program which combines Church Recreation and Sacred Music is in place for the first year, and the Sacred Music major has received recent approval from NASM. Six of the eight faculty members have completed or are completing doctoral programs. Performance opportunities have been refined through a reorganization of choral groups (1984-85), and a student conducting the orchestra during a public performance. This honor is complemented by the pre-professional status accorded to the orchestra this year. The music scholarship program has undergone tremendous expansion in recent years, while a student placement program has successfully arranged a church position for every student desiring part-time employment while in school.

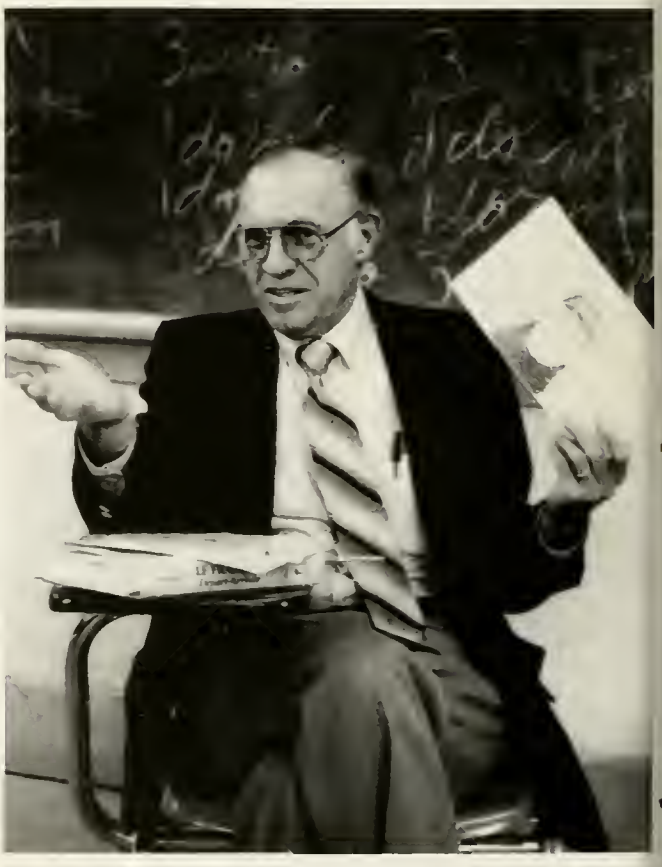
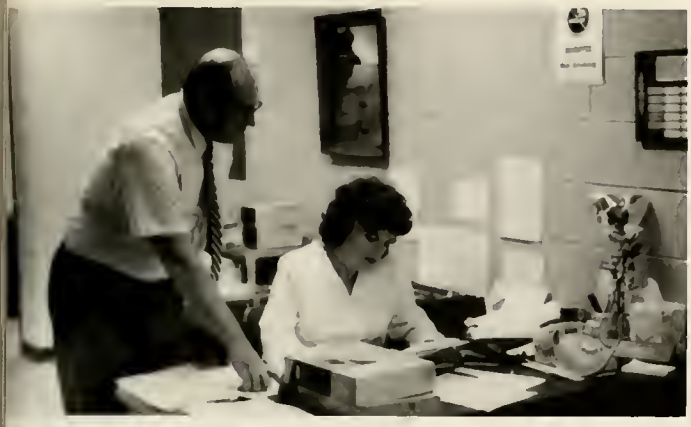
Foreign Language and Literature

Classical languages, although perhaps the most obvious, are not the only classic elements in the Department of Foreign Languages and Literature. No, this is a department with history behind it. From the earliest days of Gardner-Webb, foreign language requirements were an integral part of the core curriculum. Then, several years ago, the requirements were dropped from several degree programs, and the department experienced some lean years. Hard times, however, bred creative thinking, and the department is now witnessing a revival of interest in foreign language in response to attractive new offerings. Intensive Oral programs are offered in French and Spanish, allowing students with six hour requirements to fulfill them in a single semester while mastering the spoken language through a variety of learning experiences. Teaching assistants from abroad regularly spend a year of residence at Gardner-Webb, each providing high quality instruction for students studying the native language of the assistant. Both summer and winter travel programs allow students who show a high degree of interest and competence in French to visit Quebec, lodge with French-speaking families, and grow in their command of the language. Excellent scholarship availability aids in making this foreign study possible.





Health and Physical Education

The age-old image of Physical Education which equates it with demanding athletic activity is not totally outdated by any means. Majoring in Physical Education is still a rigorous endeavor, and probably always will be. That's classic. So is the commitment to achievement and the discipline which underlies the Physical Education program. The Department of Health Education and Physical Education visibly carries on the Gardner-Webb tradition of service, offering facilities, equipment, instruction, and structured tournaments to the entire college community. Fully committed to the liberal arts education, the department attempts to promote healthy and well-rounded lifestyles among students through the introductory courses required of all students.

The classic image alone may be misleading, however. There's more to be found in this department than competition, endurance, and sweat. Flexible degree programs make it possible for majors to earn the Bachelor of Science Degree in either Health Education or Physical Education. Both degrees offer the option of preparation for teacher certification, and a track in Church Recreation is a new option within the Physical Education major. The modern, well-equipped facilities of the Lutz-Yelton Convocation Center house the program. New technology, including computers and a treadmill, continues to aid in its advancement. And, for those who still like to "sweat it out," the Wells Fargo Fitness Trail, in use for only a few years now, offers innovative, self-paced approach to physical fitness. Although new structures are used, the best of the classic approach is retained throughout this department, assuring the continuance of a tradition well worth maintaining.

Mathematical Sciences

The most classical element of the Department of Mathematical Science may well be the fact that it still deals in absolutes. Course offerings reflect a basic commitment to teaching the fundamentals of higher mathematics and logic, classic disciplines in themselves. Three Bachelor of Science degrees are offered, with majors in Mathematics, Secondary Mathematics Education, and Computer Science. A Dual-Degree Program in Engineering, a cooperative effort of Gardner-Webb and Auburn University, offers a five-year plan for students interested in earning both a liberal arts degree and an engineering degree.

With the advent of the Information Age, Computer Science has become a much more attractive field, and an emphasis on mathematics in North Carolina high schools has also touched the department. Due at least in part to these developments, the Department of Mathematical Science is now the fastest growing department on campus. Responding to such rapid expansion, the department has chosen academic year 1985-86 for the acquisition of new office space, new equipment, and a new professor, Dr. Ted Monroe.

Natural Sciences

Members of the Natural Sciences faculty are understandably proud of several classic aspects of their department. First and foremost, they point out an undaunted commitment to strict academic standards. These professors crack a slight smile upon hearing that the Department of Natural Sciences is one of the toughest from which to earn a degree, for they continually aim to provide an education in science which is second to none among four-year science programs in the United States. They also describe with pride thet sense of camaraderie and high level of morale which characterizes both instructors and students, as well as the degree of personal attention in their teaching relationship.

Discovery never ceases, or even slows its pace, within the field of scientific investigation, so changes too numerous to mention within the Department of Natural Sciences are largely designed to keep pace with new developments in the field of study. Academic degree innovations include the Physician's Assistant Program (in cooperation with the Bowman Gray School of Medicine) and the Medical Technology Program (in cooperation with the Boman Gray School of Medicine and Charlotte Memorial Hospital).

Psychology/Social Sciences

The Department of Psychology sets forth its purpose in classical terms; faculty members attempt to give students an academic appreciation of human behavior accentuated by an appreciation of the dignity of persons.

New developments include a variety of seminars, such as the Psychology of Aging and the Psychology of Women, plus the addition of a computer system which should provide significant assistance to students involved in research.

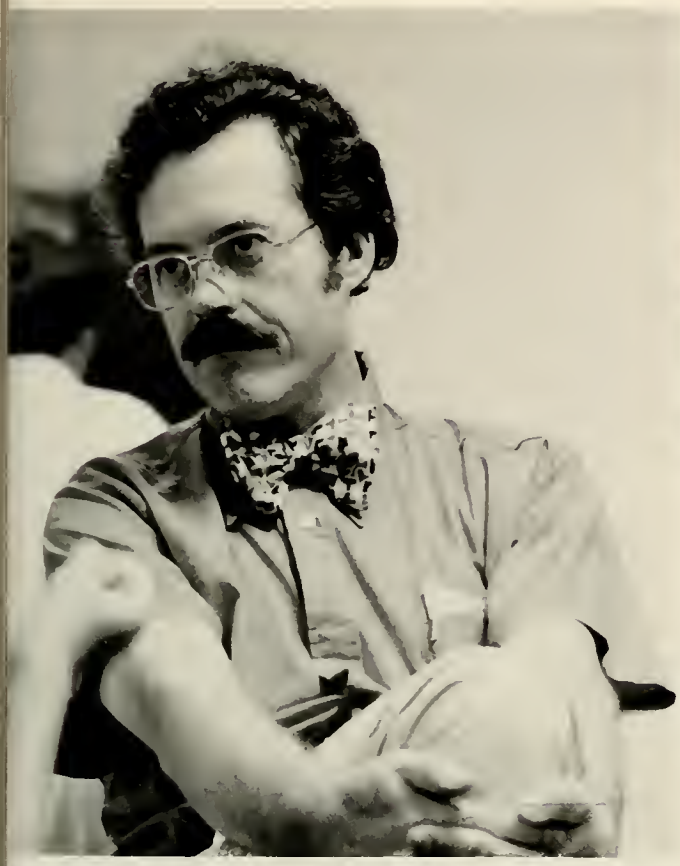
Although the majority of psychology graduates undertake graduate study, the program connects several fields and provides strong preparation for employment in a wide range of positions.

A separate department, Social Sciences, is classic in its unique perspective of time and events.

Concentrations are available in history, sociology, and political science. These traditional academic groupings, dropped by several major universities in recent years, are once again becoming standard, a testimony to their classic status.

The department is proud of its Criminal Justice and Human Services Programs, offered as a part of the GOAL Program. This evening outreach of the college allows the already employed a chance to complete their education.

In the regular day school program, a newly developed and expanding internship program allows department majors to prepare more effectively and completely for future careers before leaving the academic setting.



Religious Studies and Philosophy

Members of the Religion and Philosophy faculty find strength in a healthy diversity both of backgrounds and opinions, a long-standing tradition at Gardner-Webb. Within the faculty, graduates of four of the six Southern Baptist seminaries as well as of non-Southern Baptist schools work together in an atmosphere of cooperativeness modelling for students an alternative to the fractionalism which so often plagues religious groups. A democratic style of leadership which accepts and respects differences has led to quality, stability, and strength. The size of the department allows representation of a variety of specializations, a distinction rare among small Baptist colleges. While basically conservative and in touch with the mainstream of Southern Baptist life, the Department of Religion and Philosophy prides itself in serving students from the wide range of backgrounds and positions found within the Gardner-Webb student body. The Religion major, with three available concentrations, continues the classic Gardner-Webb tradition of providing essential and practical equipment for ministry in an atmosphere of academic challenge and spiritual stimulation.

Recent happenings within the Department of Religion and Philosophy include a major space reorganization which has made available a private seminar room as well as making possible the location of all faculty offices on one floor. Looking forward, the department is developing plans for programs which will better serve those with prior ministerial training who desire to complete a four-year, college-level degree, and several offerings in Philosophy are being added to the course roster. At the same time, dialogue is continuing with Southern Baptist seminaries in hope of obtaining more recognition and credit for graduates of Gardner-Webb and their advanced competencies.

Program For the Hearing Imparied

Don't be surprised if you see a lot of "hand waving" around the Gardner-Webb Campus. It's only because of the newly developed Program for the Hearing Impaired. There are currently 26 students who are enrolled from states as far away as Florida and New Jersey. Also, because of the Interpreter Program, there are several classes offered about deafness, basic theory, interpreting, and especially sign language, which is the hearing impaired person's way of communicating. Whether you are a hearing or hearing impaired student, you may participate in Signs, Inc., a sign language choir which performs at campus activities, churches, and other organizations.

The deaf program has recently moved from the Sign Post to the Potter House. There, Acting Director Cheryl Potter coordinates, with six other staff persons, the tutorial and notetaker services. They also provide equipment such as Telecommunication Devices for Deaf (TDD's), PORTATEL, and tape recorders. Also, most classrooms contain an inductive loop system. In the dorms there are visual door bells and fire alarms. For entertainment, there is a captioned television located in the lobby of the Potter House.

Connie King directs an Interpreter Training Program, an Associate of Arts degree which consists of a 35 hour curriculum. There are about eight students who are currently working to become professional interpreters.

Program for the Visually Impaired

Service has been a tradition at Gardner-Webb, and now the Program for the Visually Impaired has become a new reality here. Recently the program's offices were moved to the Sign Post building, where Nell Kilpatrick is director and coordinator.

Since the program was established in August, 1983, the enrollment has increased from one to nine students, coming from a variety of locations all over the southeast. Students are allowed to pursue a degree in any program offered at Gardner-Webb College. This is possible because of the support the administration and the development office have given. Even more important is the generous three-year grant given by the Kate B. Reynolds Health Care Trust Fund, which has provided the many varied services and equipment. Services include reader and/or tutor services and job placement. Equipment ranges from the braille textbooks and supplies, tapes, versabraille, a Cranmer modified Perkin's brailler, to the latest Apple IIe computer and an extensive library resource room.

With the fine academic curriculum, the outstanding faculty, and the family-like atmosphere at Gardner-Webb College, the student will be prepared to meet challenges in careers and in life after college.

A Special Sophomore

We have all been amazed at the speed with which Doug Armstrong moves about the campus. He's a man in a hurry, and his blindness has never slowed him down, not now, not in the past.

Born 19 years ago in McGehee, Arkansas, James Douglas Armstrong became a five-time Arkansas State wrestling champion. He is also an excellent runner who competes for the Bulldog cross country team. In addition, he is the president of the college band and the math club. Last year he was elected Freshman-class president. Doug is also a Presidential Scholar whose QPR hovers above 3.5. In high school he ranked second in his class. At Gardner-Webb, Doug is majoring in both political science and computer science and hopes to attend law school following graduation.

As Nell Kilpatrick, director of the program for the blind and visually handicapped students, says, "His parents never let him get away with anything." And, according to his mother, Dorothy Flemings, it seems as though Doug never let anything get away from him.

"When he was little,"says Mrs Flemings, "he had to do whatever the other children did. He was always determined not to let his blindness hold him back."

As one of five children, Doug was constantly being tested."I can remember," says Doug, "when the kids in the neighborhood used to play tag and I was always it. They'd run right at a tree and then veer away at the last second. Boom, I'd run into the tree."

Doug soon became wiser, however, anticipating their veers and beat them at their own game. When the kids started riding bicycles, Doug had to do it, even though he fell off several times before finally succeeding.

Life in the neighborhood wasn't all fun and games, however. The kids in his neighborhood, including those in his family, used to tease him about his handicap, calling him "no eyes."It wouldn't end there. "If I'd say that I wanted to watch television, they would say, 'don't you mean listen?' "

But, Doug has overcome these insensitivities, and he now generates respect among his peers. According to Doug, his mother was the one who kept him on the ball when he started feeling sorry for himself. "She would tell me that I had to help myself. That I had to make things happen, not just sit around and wait for things to happen."

Another important person and motivator in Doug's life was Ray Stewart, his coach since the third grade. "Ray knew when to give me a pat on the back or a kick in the rear," says Doug. "He's like a second father to me. I would bring my problems to him and he would help me solve them."

Another strong influence in Doug's life is religion. "I joined the church (Methodist) and was baptised when I was ten," he says. "There's a purpose to my blindness. People are always telling me that I inspire them to do better. God is using my handicap to help other people."

This way of thinking was demonstrated when a woman member of Doug's church (St. Peter's in McGehee) commented on his blindness and prayed for him to regain his sight. According to his mother, Doug told the woman, "Right now I don't want to see. God is using me just the way I am."

Members of the Gardner-Webb community know just how special he is. Almost everyone who has come into contact with Doug can only say good things about him.

"He's really nice to the other blind students, "says Donald Ball, one of eight other blind or visually impaired students on campus. "He's especially good to the new blind students; he helps them adjust to college life." Carol Ann Smith, a sophomore Communication Studies major, says, "I really like Doug. He's a doll."

Doug is also happy with his social life here at Gardner-Webb. "The students pretty well accept me," he says proudly. "They see me as a student who happens to be blind rather than as a blind student."

Like most other students, Doug worries about his grades. "I'm hoping for all A's this semester." All A's would be something like par for the course for a young man who wants to go to law school. "I'd like to go to Wake Forest or Duke or maybe the University of Arkansas at Little Rock and study computer law," he says, "then eventually go into politics and maybe be the first blind and black President."

This drive to succeed places Doug apart from most people. According to Kilpatrick, Doug is "highly motivated from within. He's extremely competitive, and the attitude can be seen in both his academic and athletic endeavors."

According to Doug, "Blindness is a great motivator for me. Were I able to see, I might not have been steered toward many of the opportunities that I was."

On tackling the challenges of college and law school and politics, the sophomore has this to say: "If you have a goal that you think to be almost impossible but you continually strive for that goal, you always end up progressing."

To be fair, this graduate of the Arkansas School for the Blind does possess some residual vision in good days his eyesight is 5/300. In other words, when we see something from five feet away, he sees the same thing as though it were a football field away.

"I can see best just after the sun's gone down, when it's light but there's no glare."

This residual vision does not, however, enable Doug to read. His reading gets done either in braille or through listening to recordings. That means he has to spend at least twice as much time on an assignment as a sighted student, yet he maintains an A average.

If Doug is a standout among the general population, he is a superstar among the visually-handicapped. While in high school he won two national wrestling and two national track championships in competition for the blind. He also set U.S. records for the blind at 800 meters (2:16), 1500 meters (4:38) and 5000 meters (16.51) at the International Games for the Disabled.

Doug is a special sophomore, and we have a feeling he is going to be special in anybody's ranking, anywhere, anytime.

And so another year closes — another year of memories recorded at Gardner-Webb . . .

We, the staff, share a special thanks with all who have helped us make the 1986 Web possible — especially the much-appreciated volunteers. We hope this edition of The Web will serve as an adequate collection of the events and people who have become Classic memories in our search for new horizons.
